The Leather

Leather (leōa)n. a tanned, tawed or otherwise dressed skin of animals, reptiles, bird.

Leather etymologically derived from lether (Middle English) leder (German) ledhr (Icelandic) lædr (Danish) läder (Swiss):

A testimony of how the primitive man, our ancient forefathers, who wandered across the globe used leather primarily to protect himself from the elements and then learnt to use it to meet his divergent needs. All pervasive. All important. The history dates back to some 500,000 years ago, infact, as early as the ice age, which even though not totally verified, has strongly been indicated by many researchers in their research projects. This, nevertheless, is quite a story by itself.

The genesis:

Discovery of artifacts belonging to the period when the human race were "Hunter Gatherers" clearly establishes that skins of animals killed for food were made into a type of clothing. 'Scrapers', a kind of tool, which in all probability was used to scrape fat and flesh of the inside of a skin as well as removing the hair off the surface lends credence to the fact that the late Stone Age Man had realized that leather helped to protect themselves against extreme conditions and remain alive. Encounters with the Eskimo tribes and North American Indians revealed that, by then, they were producing highly developed leather clothing.

The saga continues:

The Period:

Man had learnt to farm (grow crops) and domesticate animals. He began to settle down in one place. Shoe making (horse tack shoes a form of sandals) and Saddlery now developed, facilitating transportation.

The Bronze and Iron Age Man used leather extensively and much of this leather usage is attributed to the Moors in North Africa which eventually spread to the Spanish region and then onwards to America, Mexico, South America.

The Greek carvings point to the coming of age of leather goods. Some carvings depict men carrying water bag on one shoulder which was supported by netting besides a small draw string bag attached to a belt around the waist; possibly used to carry coins. One Greek carving shows a young man with a shoulder bag which almost resembles our modern shoulder bags or flight bags. These bags were made of soft leather. Leather draw string purses are also depicted in several paintings belonging to the Middle Ages.

A New Age had begun. Relatively large scale production of leather bags and artifacts evolved when man started to travel abroad to populate the new developing colonies in America, Canada, then on to Australia and gradually to the rest of the world. 17th Century saw the emergence of Harness Makers and Saddlers who were in great demand for their range of products ,viz. bags for powder (early Guns), saddle bags, game bags, vanity bags, business bags, handbags, wallets, writing cases, folders, cases to protect binoculars, telescopes and cameras, etc.

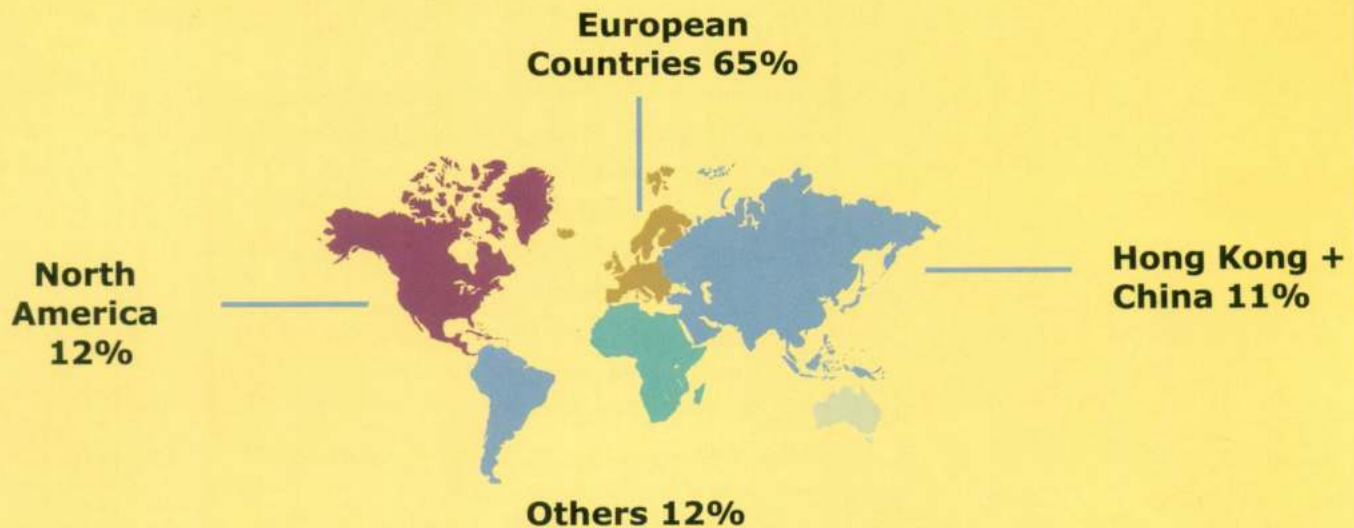

The ancient art of making leather goods became a sophisticated technological process in due course and a blend of mechanization as well as craftsmanship resulted in leather goods being coveted the world over. Increasing consumption saw many developed and developing countries focus on leather exports. Developing countries accounted for around 78% of the total population of bovine animals and since hides and skins are the basic raw material for the leather industry, robust performances in the leather export area have been consistently posted.

India A picture of sustainable growth:

India is one of the countries that has occupied a place of prominence in the field of leather exports. Easily available raw material and its optimum utilization, skilled and semi-skilled labour, craftsmanship and institutional as well as Government of India support has catapulted Indian exporters into the league of major players in the leather export arena. The composition of Indian leather exports has undergone a strategic change from a mere exporter of raw materials to value added finished products.

The major leather hubs in the country are Chennai, Karnataka and Andhra Pradesh in the Southern Region; Delhi, Punjab and Haryana in the Northern Region; Uttar Pradesh in the Central Region; West Bengal in the Eastern Region. West Bengal is a leading State contributing to over 25% of the country's leather exports. No wonder then that International brands such as Coach, Liz Clairborne, Harrods, Yves St. Laurent, Tommy Hilfiger, Etienne Aigner, Geoffrey Beene, to name a few, source leather goods and accessories from India.

Sustainable Growth

Kolkata Full steam ahead :

Kolkata (formerly known as Calcutta) has been manufacturing finished leather goods from the pre independence era. It accounts for 60per cent of the country's leather goods (bags, purse, wallet) and saddlery and 90% of hand gloves. This has been possible because of locational, functional and policy advantages. An airport and two ports further facilitate export of leather and leather goods. Consistency in quality of leather as well as manufactured products and accessories, ability to customize, value for money, timely delivery, and showcasing of products in various fairs and exhibitions have yielded fruitful results. Long standing relationship with existing importers and quest for new markets have culminated in sustaining the export growth momentum.

Kolkata Leather Complex

Kolkata
Leather
Complex

Kolkata's advantages :

Government of West Bengal initiative:

The Government of West Bengal underscoring the need for a planned development of the leather industry in Kolkata has allocated land spread over 1100 acres for the Calcutta Leather Complex (CLC). This modern integrated leather complex has been developed by a private company on a build - operate - transfer basis. The USD 90 million CLC provides “synergistic” facilities for all aspects of leather production with environment friendly technology and a pollution - free environment. It houses the entire range of activities associated with the leather industry.

Good supply of raw material:

With its large livestock population, the industry has an undisturbed supply of good quality raw material: particularly cow, buffalo and goat leather. Bihar an adjacent state, (India's second largest producer of hides) also sends a regular supply of hides and skins to Kolkata for processing.

Tanneries:

Kolkata's strategic location; proximity to the delta region of the Sunderbans resulting in a high underground water level is a boon for the 500 tanneries that operate in and around Kolkata since abundant water is a prime requirement. Institutional support and training has led to the production of quality leather which is necessary for augmenting both productivity and exports in the leather sector.

Superior quality of leather is processed in these tanneries and Kolkata is merited for first-rate leather such as

- DDM Drum dried mill leather
- NDM Natural dried mill leather
- Nappa leather
- Patent leather
- Printed leather
- PU Leather
- Vegetable tanned leather
- Antique finish leather
- Suede
- Nu'buck
- Softy and others

XL Enterprises Limited

www.exelfashions.com

The Largest Collection of Leather Products & Leather Accessories
We lead through Innovation & Quality

Production :

Over 1200 fabricators cum manufacturers are engaged in producing leather goods. Of these, 236 units are totally export oriented. Around 200,000 people skilled and semi-skilled are employed in the various stages of production of leather goods. Presently, the share of the value added finished products in the total exports from leather sector are 80% as against 20% in 1970s.

The cutting edge :

Exporters from Kolkata are justifiably proud of the increasing global demand in leather products such as handbags, travel bags, travel nighters, briefcases, wallets, folios, file cases, clutch bags, purses, belts, bracelets, et al.

One of the reasons is their ability to manufacture bags flawlessly according to the design or sample provided by the buyer. Often 'a family' for the same design is also developed. A keen desire to create their own designs at par with the major global players, in order to tap the high potential for growth many of the exporters are now employing in-house designers from premier designing institutions to assist them in forecasting global trends besides taking recourse to design solutions from FREYA, a top-notch design studio housed in the CLC.

State of the art machineries are being utilized for skiving splitting, stitching as well as colouring and polishing such as Omac, Torrel, Adler, Puff, Juki, Dopler to name a few.

The strength also lies in the ability to cater not only to the varying requirements of the many nations that Kolkata exports to but also the expertise to address distinct consumer profiles.

Corporate Social Responsibility:

The last decade has seen a tremendous change in the realm of CSR. The modern effluent treatment plant CETP in the CLC ensures recycling of waste products and water. Social audits are adhered to by most exporters and apart from ISO 9001, ISO 14000, CE, SA8000 for the manufacturing and operational level quality control, many of the export houses are audited by BSCI, SEDEX, UND, Li & Fung amongst others. One of the leading exporter has in its payroll physically handicapped people and is mulling on the idea of engaging blind people. A study is being conducted to assess the feasibility of such an action

Export

Export profile:

Major export markets for leather bags are USA, Germany, Italy, UK, Spain, France, Russia, Sweden, Canada, Greece. Foray into markets such as Estonia, Holland, Netherlands, Denmark and other Asian countries augurs well and Kolkata with its unique advantage of economies of scale, capability of producing niche products, aggressive e-marketing, use of information technology and decision support software and the capability to assimilate new technologies and handle large projects has secured a place of pride in the Indian leather export scenario.

Government of India plans & Policies :

The Government of India had identified the 'Leather Sector' as a 'Focus Sector' in its Foreign Trade Policy 2004-09 in view of its immense potential for export growth prospects and employment generation. Various developmental programmes as well as export promotional activities are being undertaken and vision 2013-14 aims at an increase in export by 7.03 billion US$ in this sector. Kolkata, a major beneficiary of such programmes and schemes, is poised for manifold growth and leather exporters from Kolkata are leaving no stone unturned to ensure that every product manufactured acquires an image, which then goes on to becoming a brand thereby developing its own personality.

This then is the story of incessant growth. Of striding and distinguished progress.

A story of continuity, a story without a finale.....
